

audio1

Transcribed by TurboScribe. Go Unlimited to remove this message.

Hey, so I'm doing a quick survey about how people use AI and whether we can trust it or not. Is it okay if I record it? Yeah sure. So first question, what do you usually use AI for? I use AI for understanding concepts, coding help and assignments.

It also helps me save time and improve clarity in my work. So second question, when did you first start using AI? I started using AI during my early college years. It became more common when such tools became easily available.

So have you ever used AI to complete work and you didn't fully understand? Yes, I've used AI for tasks I didn't fully understand. This usually happens when I'm short on time. So did you try to learn that later and after submission of it? Sometimes I go back and learn the concept afterward, but in some cases I just submit it due to deadlines.

Do you think using AI for assignments is cheating? It depends on usage. Learning with AI is fine, but copying is not. Submitting AI work without understanding can be considered cheating.

Where do you personally draw the line between help and cheating? Help is when AI supports learning and understanding. Cheating is when answers are copied without effort or thinking. Have you ever submitted AI generated work as your own? Yes, I've done it occasionally for simpler tasks.

However, I try to understand the content before submitting now. So do you trust AI answers completely? I don't fully trust AI and usually verify important answers. I cross-check using other resources or test the output myself.

What makes you doubt an AI response? I doubt AI when answers seem too general or inconsistent. Errors in logic or incorrect results also raise suspicion. Have you ever ignored correct AI advice because you didn't trust it? Yes, I have ignored correct advice due to confusion or doubt.

This usually happens when it differs from what I learned earlier. If AI gives wrong information and you use it, who is responsible? The responsibility is mine because I chose to use it. AI is just a tool and cannot be held accountable.

Would you use AI for important decisions like career, exam, health or something? I would use AI only for suggestions or basic guidance. For important decisions, I prefer expert or verified resources. Okay, thank you.

Transcribed by TurboScribe. Go Unlimited to remove this message.